1 THE PRESIDENT: Good morning. The Tribunal will continue today its hearing in the 2 case concerning the Enrica Lexie Incident. We will hear this morning the second
 3 round of oral arguments presented by Italy but before I give the floor to the 4 representative of Italy, in light of yesterday's oral presentation, Judge Cot has a
 5 question. It was communicated just now to the parties in writing but I would like to 6 invite Judge Cot to ask his question.

7
 8 JUDGE COT (Interpretation from French): Thank you, Mr President. On behalf of 9 Italy, Sir Daniel Bethlehem proposed to transform the surety of 300,000 euros in 10 respect of each of the marines. I am quoting him. "Through some appropriate 11 arrangement into a surety given to India in accordance with the stipulations of an 12 order of this Tribunal." Could Italy be more specific as to the proposal. And does 13 India wish to react to such a proposal? Thank you, Mr President.

14
 15 THE PRESIDENT: As indicated in the written communication to the parties, the 16 answer to this question could be either provided during these oral hearings or in 17 writing by tomorrow noon.

18
 19 Now we will resume our consideration and I will give the floor to Sir Daniel 20 Bethlehem to begin his statement.

21
 22 MR BETHLEHEM: Thank you, Mr President, Members of the Tribunal. Let me say at 23 the outset that we will take the opportunity to reply in writing to Judge Cot by 24 tomorrow, as indicated.

25
 26 Mr President, Members of the Tribunal, I will open Italy's reply submissions. I will be 27 followed by Sir Michael Wood. He will be followed in turn by Professor Guglielmo 28 Verdirame. Italy's Agent will conclude Italy's reply with some substantive remarks as 29 well as the formal statement of the provisional measures that Italy requests.

30
 31 Mr President, Members of the Tribunal, we heard a rising tide of rhetoric yesterday
 32 afternoon accusing Italy of dissembling, dishonesty and delay. This case, it was said,
 33 is about a double murder committed by the Italian marines that has only an incidental 34 connection to the sea, and not one that is sufficient to bring the dispute within the 35 ambit of UNCLOS. It is a remarkable contention. We agree that the most regrettable
 36 deaths of the two Indian fishermen require investigation and, as appropriate,
 37 prosecution; and the Prosecutor of the Military Tribunal in Rome has an open 38 investigation for the crime of murder that must be pursued to its conclusion.

39
 40 But there is an antecedent issue that requires prior determination, which is the 41 subject-matter of the dispute between Italy and India, namely, who has jurisdiction to 42 pursue the investigation and, as appropriate, prosecution, and what account is to be 43 taken of the immunity of State officials. Counsel for India simply ignored this 44 jurisdictional dispute. Indeed, the submissions by India yesterday were a remarkable 45 exhibit of India's unrelenting commitment to continue to exercise its criminal
 46 jurisdiction over the marines regardless of the Annex VII proceedings that will now 47 take place.

48
 49 The Indian submissions yesterday were also remarkable for their persistence in 50 characterizing the Italian marines as murderers, as if the only issue that remained to

1 be determined is the extent of their guilt, issues of mitigation and so forth. It is a little
 2 more basic and fundamental than that, I'm afraid. The marines contest the allegation
 3 that they fired the shots that killed the unfortunate Indian fishermen. It is not
 4 accepted that the fatal shooting took place from the Enrica Lexie. There were other
 5 vessels in the area at the time and other reports of pirate attacks. While it is 6 accepted that the marines fired shots into the water to warn off what was 7 apprehended to be a pirate attack, the rest is disputed; and, I must emphasize, the 8 marines have not even been charged with murder under Indian law. Even allowing 9 for differences in appreciation between civil lawyers and common lawyers . pace,
 10 Professor Pellet . there is a baseline standard that operates in this field: a person is 11 not guilty of an offence unless and until convicted by a properly constituted court or 12 tribunal on the basis of charges of which they are informed in a timely manner and to 13 which they have had an opportunity to respond. If the Tribunal is tempted down the 14 road that Counsel for India is paving, it will find itself an outlier. There is nothing
 15 redeemable about India's approach on this issue. It is wrong, it is dangerous, and 16 you ought to have no regard for it whatever.

17
 18 Mr President, Members of the Tribunal, much of what you heard yesterday on the 19 Indian proceedings is irrelevant to the case now before you. We may get there in due 20 course, if India submits objections to the jurisdiction of the Annex VII tribunal on the 21 basis of the points that it put before you yesterday, but these issues do not go
 22 directly to the questions before you in these proceedings. They were advanced by 23 Counsel for India yesterday for one reason and one reason only: as an attempt to 24 create prejudice, to taint Italy in some manner as coming before you as an abusive 25 applicant.

26
 27 It is a dangerous game that India plays. It has constructed a house of cards. A 28 number of examples will illustrate the shortcomings of its case.

29
 30 Let me begin with the contention that the incident in question could not possibly have 31 been apprehended to have been a pirate attack, a proposition advanced in an 32 attempt to remove the incident from the ambit of UNCLOS and to call into question
 33 the prima facie jurisdiction of the Annex VII tribunal to deal with the merits of the 34 case and also, therefore, of this Tribunal to prescribe provisional measures. Counsel
 35 for India sought to substantiate the point by reference to declining statistics of piracy
 36 off the west coast of India in 2012 and the suggestion, advanced with incredulity, that 37 no one could possibly believe the St. Antony to be a pirate skiff.

38
 39 Let me take you to one or two documents in your Judges' folders. The first is the 40 Indian National Maritime Search & Rescue Board Report that I took you to 41 yesterday. It is at tab 5. I would like to take you to page 15, the page to which I drew 42 your attention yesterday but in the interests of time did not quote in full. Counsel for 43 India were on full notice of this. I did not read it but it bears reading. Let me start with 44 paragraph 3:

45
 46 Increasing shipping traffic closer to the Indian coast causes the merchant
 47 ships to, at times, transgress the fishing nets. On observing the 48 approaching merchant vessel onto their fishing nets/gear, it is common for 49 the fishing boats to raise alarm and to sail towards the merchant ship to 50 attract attention so as to avoid damage to their nets.

Reports are being received where merchant ships have mistaken the fishing boats to be pirate skiffs. In one such recent incident off the coast of west coast of India, Kerala, a merchant ship fired on the fishermen, killing two of the fishermen. The ship's security guards had assumed the innocent fishermen to be the pirates. In addition, there has been a report of another report of firing of warning shots on Indian fishermen. In another case a merchant ship collided with a fishing boat. This resulted in sinking of the boat and the loss of life of three fishermen.

Skipping to the next paragraph:

It has been reported that merchant ships are transiting very close to the coast to avoid the high-risk area which starts 12 nautical miles from the Indian coast.

A number of points emerge from this Notice. First, it affirms the designation of a piracy High Risk Area that starts at 12 nautical miles from the Indian coast. Second, it records explicitly that reports had been received of merchant vessels mistaking fishing boats to be pirate skiffs+. Third, it reports on the Enrica Lexie incident, although without identifying it as such, in the context of a misapprehension about pirate attacks. Fourth, it describes a modus operandi of fishing boats that may lead them to be mistaken for pirate skiffs. Fifth, it notes a second report of firing of warning shots on Indian fishermen, as well as other incidents involving death and injury.

Let me take you to another document. It is at tab 31. This is in our original annexes. It is an International Maritime Bureau report that details the Enrica Lexie incident. If you look at the bottom of the page, you will see the references and the coordinates of the Enrica Lexie incident, giving 1600 local time as the time. If you look to the right of the barely discernible map, you will see reference to a second reported pirate attack in the same vicinity about six hours later in which 20 robbers in two boats approached an anchored tanker and attempted to board her. So we have two reports of pirate attacks in the same vicinity along the Kerala coast within hours of each other.

Counsel for India both protest too much+when he tries to make the case that it is not credible for an oil tanker crew to apprehend a fast-approaching fishing boat as a possible pirate attack. Even a cursory review of the monthly statistics published by the International Maritime Organization reporting on acts of piracy indicates that a not uncommon modus operandi is for pirate attacks to be launched from skiffs, easily mistaken for fishing boats.¹ With the greatest of respect to Counsel for India, they are making it up as they go along. There is no serious foundation for the propositions that they put to the Tribunal yesterday on this issue.

Mr President, Members of the Tribunal, let me turn to another allegation made by India's Counsel yesterday that has no basis whatever. In its written statement, India impugned Italy's good faith by saying that Italy had failed to present the other four

1 marines for interview by the Indian agency that was responsible for investigating
 2 incidents. Counsel for India went on to say that it was this delay caused by Italy's
 3 obstruction that caused the agency to fail to issue the charge sheet. To drive home
 4 his point, Counsel for India took you to tab 16 of the Indian Judges' folder and read
 5 out the language of the Italian Statement regarding the presentation of the four 6 marines for interview. You will recall that the relevant portion of the Statement read:

7
 8 The Republic of Italy is agreeable to give an assurance to the Supreme 9 Court of India that if the presence of the marines is required, Italy shall 10 ensure their presence before an appropriate court or authority.

11
 12 Counsel for India dwelt on this language of "ensure their presence",² hammering it
 13 again and again, as if the mere repetition of the words would drive home Italy's 14 dissembling unreliability and untrustworthiness.

15
 16 I endeavoured, in my opening submissions yesterday, to caution India pre-emptively
 17 about this argument, saying that it ought to know its own law better than it described 18 it to the Tribunal. They charged ahead nonetheless. Let me take you, therefore, to 19 section 161 of India's Code of Criminal Procedure, which is at tab 33 of your Judges' folder.
 20 This addresses the examination of witnesses by police. Paragraph 1 of 21 section 161 provides that

22
 23 Any police officer may examine orally any person supposed to be 24 acquainted with the facts and circumstances of the case.

25
 26 Paragraph 3 provides that

27
 28 The police officer may reduce into writing any statements made to him in 29 the course of an examination under this section.

30
 31 There follows a sentence in square brackets, denoting that the language was added
 32 to the section by Act 5 of 2009. It reads:

33
 34 Provided that statements made under this sub-section may also be 35 recorded by audio-video electronic means.

36
 37 So, here we have it that audio-video testimony is expressly contemplated and 38 authorized by India's Code of Criminal Procedure.

39
 40 So what then of the language of ensuring the "presence" of the marines? Let me
 41 take you to the 2003 judgment of the Indian Supreme Court in the Praful Desai case.
 42 It is at tab 34 of your Judges' folder. The case concerned the interpretation of section
 43 273 of the Indian Code of Criminal Procedure, which addresses evidence in inquiries
 44 and trials. The section is headed "Evidence to be taken in the presence of accused".
 45 Here we have the language of "presence". If I may ask you to turn to page 603 of the 46 judgment, which is the headnote or summary of the judgment, you will see part-way
 47 down the page the question that is framed, and it is stated to be "whether in a 48 criminal trial, evidence can be recorded by video-conferencing". The answer is:
 49 "Section 273 contemplates constructive presence". This shows that actual physical

² ITLOS/PV.15/C24/2 (unchecked), 10 August 2015, p. 26 (Bundy); p. 36 (Pellet).

1 presence is not a must. This indicates that the term "presence", as used in this
 2 section, is not used in the sense of actual physical presence. It goes on:

3
 4 Further evidence can be both oral and documentary and electronic records
 5 can be produced as evidence. This means that evidence, even in criminal
 6 matters, can also be given by way of electronic records. This would include
 7 video-conferencing.

8
 9 The relevant passages in the full judgment are at 12 and 19.

10
 11 Mr President, Members of the Tribunal, with the greatest of respect to Counsel for 12 India, they are making it up as they go along. Italy fully acquitted its assurance to 13 India to ensure the presence of the four marines for interview. Italy's senior Indian
 14 Counsel at the time that all this occurred was Mr Mukul Rohatgi, now the Attorney
 15 General of India. He would not have countenanced anything else.

16
 17 Mr President, Members of the Tribunal, let me turn to yet another allegation made by 18 India's Counsel yesterday that has no basis whatever. Counsel for India sought to 19 characterize what they described as Italy's litigation strategy as capricious and 20 inconsistent and merely a matter of convenience, with the filing of the Notification
 21 initiating Annex VII arbitration being simply the latest twist. You were told, for 22 example, by both the Additional Solicitor General and Mr Bundy that in April 2012
 23 Italy filed a petition before the Indian Supreme Court in which Italy asked the Indian 24 Supreme Court to take custody of the two marines . this at the time when the 25 marines were still being held in Kerala. You were referred to a two-page extract of 26 Writ Petition No.135 at tab 15 of India's Judges' folder and directed to a paragraph in 27 which Italy argued that ~~at~~ the very least the Union of India was under an obligation
 28 to take custody of the marines pending a final decision being reached on jurisdiction.

29
 30 The whole document was annexed to Italy's Request for provisional measures as 31 Annex A/16. A review of the whole document gives a rather different picture. An 32 accurate appreciation of what Italy was asking for is seen in the Prayer for Relief that 33 sets out the formal requests being made. This is at tab 35 of your Judges' folder.
 34 You will see on the front cover the petitioners, no.1 being the Italian Republic, no.2 is 35 Sergeant Latorre and no.3 is Salvatore Girone, and then you have the respondents, 36 the Union of India and others. If you turn over the page you will see the Prayer for 37 Relief, and it says:

38
 39 In view of the facts and circumstances stated hereinabove, it is most 40 respectfully prayed that this Honourable Court may be graciously be 41 pleased to:-

42
 43 Declare that any action by Respondent in relation to the alleged incident
 44 referred to in Para 6 and 7 above, under the Criminal Procedure Code or 45 any other Indian law, would be illegal and ultra vires and violative of Articles
 46 14 and 21 of the Constitution of India; and

47
 48 Declare that the continued detention of Petitioners 2 and 3 . Sergeants
 49 Latorre and Girone . by the State of Kerala is illegal and ultra vires being 50 violative of the principles of sovereign immunity and also violative of Art. 14
 51 and 21 of the Constitution of India; and 52

1 Issue writ of Mandamus and/or any other suitable writ, order or direction
 2 under Article 32 directing that the Union of India take all steps as may be
 3 necessary to secure custody of Petitioners 2 and 3 and make over their 4 custody to Petitioner No. 1

5

6 In other words, to hand them over to Italy.

7

8 Far from supporting India's contention of Italian inconsistency and capriciousness, 9 this illustrates that Italy was saying then to the Indian Supreme Court what it has 10 been saying throughout, and what it has been saying to you in these proceedings, 11 namely, that India's assertion of jurisdiction over the Enrica Lexie incident is 12 unlawful, that the continued detention of the marines is illegal, and that they should 13 be delivered into Italian custody.

14

15 Mr President, Members of the Tribunal, once again, with the greatest of respect to 16 Counsel for India, they are making it up as they go along. Italy was saying then what 17 it is saying now.

18

19 Mr President, Members of the Tribunal, let me take you to another example of India's 20 creative lawyering. We heard yesterday from India's Counsel that the Indian 21 Supreme Court judgment of 18 January 2013 left open the possibility for Italy to 22 re-agitate³ all issues of jurisdiction. They were clear about this yesterday. This 23 argument was variously part of India's allegations against Italy of abuse of process,
 24 of exhaustion of local remedies, of electa una via, of equity. It is at the core of India's 25 argument not simply that Italy must stick to the path that it has chosen but that every 26 avenue remains open to Italy in the Indian domestic proceedings.

27

28 Mr President, Members of the Tribunal, what India said in oral argument yesterday
 29 does not comport with what it said in its Written Observations. In its Written 30 Observations, at paragraph 1.19, India says:

31

32 ō in spite of a clear ruling by the Supreme Court in its judgment of 18
 33 January 2013 ō Italy has disregarded the principle of res judicata and 34 repeatedly approached the court on jurisdictional issues ...

35

36 Further, and even more tellingly, in the affidavit submitted by the Indian Ministry of 37 Home Affairs to the Indian Supreme Court in the Article 32 Writ Petition proceedings,
 38 which seeks to re-visit the issues of jurisdiction and immunity, the Indian 39 Government objects to the entire petition on the grounds that it seeks to

40

41 re-agitate issues which have already been raised by the Petitioners before
 42 this Hon'ble Court and which have been decided by this Hon'ble Court,

43

44 including as regards both jurisdiction and immunity.

45

46 Mr President, Members of the Tribunal, what India is saying to you in these 47 proceedings is the diametric opposite of what it is saying to its own Supreme Court.
 48 I hesitate to use the phrase again that India is making it up as it goes along. It is 49 more than that. It is rather more pernicious.

³ ITLOS/PV.15/C24/2 (unchecked), 10 August 2015, p. 7 (Pellet).

1
2 Mr President, Members of the Tribunal, Counsel for India also sought to persuade
3 you that the delay in the Indian proceedings is all to be laid at the doorstep of Italy
4 and that, but for Italy's machinations, a charge sheet would have been issued years
5 ago, due process would have been served, and all this would be behind us.
6

7 This is so far from reality as almost to amount to fiction. In the 16 months since the 8 Article 32 Writ Petition was filed, the Indian Government has missed filing deadline
9 after filing deadline. Affidavits from Indian ministries and agencies are still 10 outstanding today. In order after order, in four separate hearings, the Registrar of the 11 Indian Supreme Court required various Indian Government ministries to submit 12 affidavits required of them. Submissions are still outstanding. The delay in the Article
13 32 Writ Petition is due completely and utterly to delays by India.
14

15 This brings me to the affidavit that was due to be filed by the Indian Government
16 yesterday in the Article 32 Writ Petition deferment proceedings in respect of which a 17 hearing is scheduled to take place on 26 August. The Indian Government did not 18 submit that affidavit. Not only is this but the latest example of missed filing deadlines
19 by India, but it also calls into question the viability of the 26 August hearing date. In 20 the light of what we heard from India yesterday, we also anticipate that it signals that 21 India will in due course submit an affidavit opposing the deferment application, which 22 would trigger exactly the kind of precipitous aggravation of the dispute that we are 23 concerned about.
24

25 India has, in these proceedings, been clear that it wishes to press ahead with the 26 criminal trial of the marines, notwithstanding the Annex VII proceedings that have 27 now been commenced. The more we hear from India, the more we are alarmed by 28 what they intend. It injects a new urgency into the Request for provisional measures 29 that we have made to you.
30

31 Mr President, Members of the Tribunal, let me conclude on urgency. Counsel for 32 India, although, we note, not the Indian Agent, questioned whether what Italy had 33 said yesterday about the impasse in the political process was reliable. In my 34 submissions yesterday morning I outlined the political process that Italy had pursued,
35 an open process, through correspondence to the Ministry of External Affairs, and a
36 private process through the most senior advisers of Prime Minister Renzi and Prime 37 Minister Modi.
38

39 On 31 May this year, India's Minister of External Affairs, Sushma Swaraj, gave a 40 wide-ranging media briefing to mark one year in government. In the course of this 41 briefing she was asked a general question about Indian relations with the European 42 Union. Her reply, which is at tab 36 of your Judges' folder, included the following:
43

44 So far as the marines issue is concerned, we have repeatedly conveyed to 45 Italy, you please join us in judicial process. The matter is sub judice. So far,
46 they have not even joined the judicial process. If they join our judicial 47 process, things can move forward.
48

49 Some days after this statement, Italy was informed on the private channel of 50 engagement between the senior Prime Ministerial advisers that the statement by

1 Minister Swaraj reflected the position of the Government. There was no scope for the 2 Indian Government to engage in further discussions about a political settlement. This
 3 is the reason why Italy instituted Annex VII proceedings on 26 June. There was no
 4 longer any prospect of a negotiated solution.

5
 6 The situation has changed fundamentally in recent weeks. There is no prospect of a
 7 political settlement. The unavoidable consequence is that India intends to press
 8 ahead with the criminal trial of the marines. Notwithstanding the dispute over 9 jurisdiction that will now go to the Annex VII tribunal, India has indicated that it
 10 intends to continue to exercise jurisdiction over the marines. It intends to require 11 Sergeant Latorre to re-apply for leave to remain in Italy on humanitarian grounds,
 12 again and again, without regard for the Annex VII proceedings that will now address
 13 the question of whether India has jurisdiction over the marines.

14
 15 India has not contested in any way the humanitarian evidence that has been put 16 before you concerning Sergeant Girone, yet it has made it clear in these proceedings 17 that it will have no regard to these circumstances whatsoever, and will keep 18 Sergeant Girone in Delhi. Counsel for India, while characterizing Italy's description of 19 Sergeant Girone as a hostage as "odious", nonetheless went on to say:

20
 21 What is true, however, is that the presence of Mr Girone on Indian soil
 22 provides the guarantee that he will be able to be tried once that time 23 comes.

24
 25 This sounds like a hostage to us, and this is the language that has been used to Italy
 26 by Indian officials to describe Sergeant Girone.

27
 28 Mr President, Members of the Tribunal, there is an imminent risk of a serious
 29 aggravation of this dispute. There is evidence before you, uncontroverted, of acute
 30 humanitarian circumstances. You have India before you, in this Chamber, saying 31 openly that they will press ahead with their domestic proceedings, notwithstanding 32 that an Annex VII proceeding has been seised with a dispute over India's jurisdiction.
 33 We do not know what step India will take next. We are on the cusp of a precarious 34 moment.

35
 36 Mr President, Members of the Tribunal, that concludes my submissions this morning.
 37 Mr President, may I invite you to call Sir Michael Wood to the podium.

38
 39 THE PRESIDENT: Thank you, Sir Daniel. I now give the floor to Sir Michael Wood.

40
 41 MR WOOD: Mr President, Members of the Tribunal, I shall make just four points in 42 response to what we heard from India yesterday. These concern a curious question
 43 of terminology; the local remedies issue; the supposed time limit on provisional 44 measures; and India's assertion that the measures requested would prejudice the 45 final award.

46
 47 India has not yet responded to what I said yesterday, all of which I stand by but need 48 not repeat.

1 I begin by noting that our friends opposite constantly refer to the %admissibility+of 2 Italy's requests for provisional measures.⁴ Inadmissibility is not a term normally
 3 associated with a provisional measures phase. India uses the term in a way that 4 seems designed to sow confusion, to conflate provisional measures proceedings and 5 a possible preliminary objections phase going to jurisdiction and admissibility. By 6 using this novel terminology, they apparently seek to extend the requirements for the 7 prescription of provisional measures beyond those that I set out yesterday and to 8 turn the present phase into one concerning jurisdiction and admissibility.

9
 10 A good example of this deliberate confusion is India's approach to local remedies.
 11 Professor Pellet devoted much of his first speech yesterday to article 295 of 12 UNCLOS.⁵ He failed, however, to respond in any way to what I had said in the 13 morning.⁶

14
 15 The main point is that it is inappropriate to address the application of article 295 in 16 the course of a provisional measures phase. Exhaustion of local remedies is not an 17 issue going to the prima facie jurisdiction of the Annex VII tribunal. Rather, it is an 18 issue concerning the admissibility of a case. The question of exhaustion of local 19 remedies requires a detailed examination of the facts relating to the merits, and is 20 not appropriate to the urgent and expedited nature of provisional measures
 21 proceedings. If India wishes to raise a point about exhaustion of local remedies that 22 will be considered by the Annex VII tribunal.

23
 24 The jurisprudence of this Tribunal expressly confirms this. In the M/V "Louisa" Case, 25 this Tribunal expressly stated that it was inappropriate to consider the issue of 26 exhaustion of local remedies at the provisional measures phase and that it should 27 instead be %examined at a future stage of the proceedings+.⁷

28
 29 I shall not therefore go into the application of the local remedies rule at this stage
 30 beyond what I said yesterday, except to say this. Article 295 provides that local 31 remedies are to be exhausted %where this is required by international law+, namely in 32 the context of diplomatic protection. This is not a case of diplomatic protection.
 33 Yesterday, in this context, Professor Pellet studiously avoided referring to the 34 marines as State officials, acknowledging that the acts alleged were performed in the 35 exercise of their official functions. As members of a Vessel Protection Detachment, 36 they exercised official functions connected to the rights that States have under the 37 law of the sea. As I explained yesterday, Italy is asserting a direct injury to its own 38 rights as a result of the wrongful acts of India. The question whether an injury is 39 direct or indirect, or mixed, may sometimes be a difficult issue,⁸ though not in this 40 case. I have already addressed you on the injury to Italy's rights under a whole
 41 series of provisions of UNCLOS. Suffice to say, these are Italy's rights under 42 UNCLOS; they are not the rights of the marines. This was the point that Avvocato

1 Busco was making yesterday when he referred to Italy's rights+being at issue,⁹ not
 2 as Mr Bundy suggested Italy's rights in contradistinction to India's rights.¹⁰

3
 4 The marines are not private persons+to whom diplomatic protection applies.
 5 Exhaustion of local remedies is only relevant where a State espouses the claim of a
 6 private citizen+(ressortissant). It does not apply where the individual was engaged
 7 in official business on behalf of his or her State. This is confirmed by the 8 commentaries of the International Law Commission to the Draft Articles on 9 Diplomatic Protection and the Articles on State Responsibility.¹¹ On the facts before 10 us, the marines are not private individuals by any definition, nor were they acting in a 11 private capacity. They are State officials of the Italian Navy. At the time of the 12 incident in February 2012, they were deployed by the Italian Navy and exercising
 13 official functions on board the Enrica Lexie. The local remedies rule has no 14 application in this situation.

15
 16 I turn to my third point. Yesterday Mr Bundy claimed that Italy was oblivious to the 17 point that there is a temporal limitation to the duration of any provisional measures
 18 that may be prescribed by this Tribunal,¹² and he asserted that this Tribunal is not 19 called on to consider any provisional measures that will remain in force throughout 20 the duration of the Annex VII arbitration.¹³ I already answered that point yesterday, 21 since it was also made in India's Written Observations.¹⁴ It is simply wrong. That is 22 clear from the practice of this Tribunal. Provisional measures prescribed by the Law
 23 of the Sea Tribunal under article 290, paragraph 5, do not have express temporal 24 limits (whether extending beyond the constitution of the Annex VII tribunal or 25 otherwise).¹⁵ I refer you to recent examples of the provisional measures prescribed
 26 in the ARA Libertad and Arctic Sunrise cases. Of course, under article 290, 27 paragraph 5, this Tribunal may only prescribe provisional measures if they need to 28 be prescribed before the Annex VII tribunal is able to do so, but that does not mean
 29 that the measures then prescribed may only last until the arbitral tribunal is itself in a 30 position to act. Article 290, paragraph 5, refers to the arbitral tribunal modifying,
 31 revoking or affirming, as the MOX Plant tribunal did, the measures prescribed by this 32 Tribunal; that would make no sense if Mr Bundy was right. So it is entirely proper for 33 Italy to request provisional measures extending to the final award of the arbitral 34 tribunal.

¹⁵ See, for recent examples, the provisional measures prescribed in "Arctic Sunrise" (Kingdom of the Netherlands v. Russian Federation), Provisional Measures, Order of 22 November 2013, ITLOS Reports 2013, p. 230; and in "ARA Libertad" (Argentina v. Ghana), Provisional Measures, Order of 15 December 2012, ITLOS Reports 2012, p. 332.

1 India has made much in its Written Observations, and yesterday, to the effect that
 2 the provisional measures requested by Italy should not be prescribed because to do
 3 so would prejudice the final result before the Annex VII tribunal. That is not and 4 cannot be the case. To adopt the language of the Tribunal in Ghana/Côte d'Ivoire,
 5 relied upon by our friends opposite, a provisional measures order ~~in~~ no way
 6 prejudices the question of the jurisdiction of [the Annex VII tribunal] relating to the 7 merits of the case or relating to the merits themselves.¹⁶

8
 9 India asserts that the implementation of the final decision would be made ~~impossible~~
 10 or more difficult if either of the provisional measures which Italy seeks were 11 prescribed. But they give no serious reasons for this assertion. In fact, most of the 12 long section in India's Written Observations entitled *A request for "pre-judgment"*¹⁷ is 13 simply irrelevant to the question of pre-judgment. It is mostly an excuse for India to 14 paint a distorted and self-serving picture of the facts.

15
 16 As regards our First Request for provisional measures, all India had to say in its 17 Written Observations was that to grant it would prejudice the merits ~~by~~ implying that 18 the investigation and judicial proceedings conducted with rigorous fairness by India
 19 to date were somehow inappropriate.¹⁸ Of course, it would do nothing of the kind; it 20 would merely hold the ring pending final determination of the issues to be decided by 21 the Annex VII tribunal.

22
 23 As regards Italy's second request, India hardly says any more. They claim that ~~lifting~~
 24 all restrictions on the liberty and movement of Mr Latorre and Mr Girone, would 25 mean that the Tribunal accepts that these restrictions ~~are~~ illegitimate and 26 unlawful.¹⁹ and that ~~what~~ Italy tries to obtain ~~is~~ a recognition by the ITLOS that 27 the accused individuals are entitled to claim immunities from the jurisdiction of Indian 28 courts.²⁰ Merely to read these out shows how far-fetched these claims are. They 29 show that India has simply not understood, or perhaps does not wish to understand, 30 the nature of provisional measures. India conveniently overlooks the fact that the 31 measures we seek, like all provisional measures, would remain in force until 32 modified or, at the latest, until a final decision on the merits.

33
 34 Yesterday, Professor Pellet argued that if Sergeants Latorre and Girone were in Italy
 35 when the award was given, and if the Annex VII tribunal found that both States had 36 jurisdiction in terms of UNCLOS, that would prejudice the matter in Italy's favour.²¹
 37 That, with respect, is pure speculation. First, concurrent jurisdiction is not what either 38 party is seeking. Second, we cannot know in what terms the arbitral tribunal would 39 make any such finding. Third, any such finding would need to take account of the 40 immunity of the two State officials in respect of acts performed in an official capacity,
 41 acts performed, moreover, in international waters. In any event, on India's reasoning
 42 Italy's rights would be equally prejudged by a decision that left the marines in India.

1 Mr President, Members of the Tribunal, that concludes what I have to say. I thank 2 you for your attention, and would request that you invite Professor Verdirame to the 3 podium.

4
 5 THE PRESIDENT: Thank you, Sir Michael. I will give the floor to Mr Guglielmo
 6 Verdirame.

7
 8 MR VERDIRAME: Mr President, Members of the Tribunal, I will reply to a number of 9 submissions made by India yesterday. I will begin by addressing India's contradictory
 10 position on the role of UNCLOS. I will then reply to India's more specific assertions 11 on the issue of irreparable prejudice and on the question of urgency.

12
 13 At the beginning let me recall a point, which Professor Pellet describes as a ~~%~~key
 14 element~~+~~,²² namely that the question of India's jurisdiction is still to be determined by 15 the Special Court.

16
 17 Sir Daniel has shown that India has been speaking with two voices on this issue:
 18 saying in an affidavit to the Indian Supreme Court that the question has been settled
 19 and contending before this Tribunal that the question is still effectively pending
 20 before its courts.

21
 22 Mr President, Members of the Tribunal, three and half years after the incident, India
 23 has not apparently yet decided if it has jurisdiction over this matter. Professor Pellet
 24 is right in describing this as a ~~%~~key element~~+~~, but it is a key element in Italy's favour.

25
 26 India wants to continue to exercise jurisdiction. It wants to continue to detain an 27 official of the Italian State, and to be at liberty to place under detention another
 28 official of the Italian State, but it has not even decided if it has jurisdiction over the 29 event.

30
 31 Quite extraordinarily, Mr President, India maintains that Italy must remain committed 32 exclusively to the Indian domestic proceedings . proceedings to which Italy objected
 33 promptly. India says that it is even an abuse of process for Italy to have started 34 international arbitral proceedings. It is Italy's right to start proceedings under 35 UNCLOS in connection to a dispute which India's own Supreme Court accurately
 36 characterizes as concerning the interpretation UNCLOS provisions. As for the idea 37 that there was some kind of ~~%~~ork in the road~~+~~here and that Italy opted for the 38 domestic process, this is so completely unfounded that it barely warrants attention.
 39 Italy did not opt for domestic proceedings. Its marines were subjected to them; and,
 40 in any event, there is no basis or precedent for the notion of ~~%~~ork in the road~~+~~in the 41 context of inter-State proceedings.

42
 43 But Counsel for India goes further, maintaining that the question of jurisdiction under 44 UNCLOS is for India's Special Court . not the Annex VII tribunal . to determine. At 45 the same time, they say that the Annex VII tribunal and this Tribunal have no
 46 jurisdiction under UNCLOS. Professor Pellet went as far as suggesting that this 47 matter ~~%~~as barely a link with the law of the sea~~+~~²³

²² ITLOS/PV.25/C24/2 (unchecked), 10 August 2015, p. 19, line 11 (Pellet).

²³ ITLOS/PV.25/C24/2 (unchecked), 10 August 2015, p. 14, line 13 (Pellet).

1
2 India cannot credibly contend that the UNCLOS rights claimed by Italy are not even 3 plausible for provisional measures, in circumstances where its own legal system has 4 not been able to determine the position under UNCLOS in three and half years.

5
6 Mr President, Members of the Tribunal, as Sir Michael has just reiterated, this is 7 about UNCLOS. The Supreme Court of India saw it in those terms too, and 8 discussed various provisions at length. May I ask you to please take a look at the 9 second sentence in paragraph 101 at tab 13 of the Indian judges' folder, from the 10 judgment of the Indian Supreme Court.

11
12 The Union of India is, therefore, directed, in consultation with the Chief 13 Justice of India, to set up a Special Court to try this case and to dispose of 14 the same in accordance with the provisions of [a number of Indian statutes]
15 and most importantly the provisions of UNCLOS 1982, where there is no
16 conflict between the domestic law and UNCLOS 1982.

17
18 Mr President, Members of the Tribunal, Italy of course does not agree that Indian 19 domestic law should displace UNCLOS. Italy wants its rights determined under 20 UNCLOS . not under UNCLOS insofar as UNCLOS is compatible with Indian law.
21 The best Italy will get at the end of the process to which Counsel for India says Italy
22 should remain committed as a matter of good faith²⁴ is a determination of Italy's 23 rights under UNCLOS where there is no conflict with Indian law+. This comment is 24 found in the key judgment by the Indian Supreme Court on the issues in dispute
25 before the Annex VII tribunal. It takes a view on the hierarchy between international 26 law and domestic law, which is of direct concern to obligations under UNCLOS. In 27 any event, Italy and India have agreed under UNCLOS that disputes over the 28 interpretation and application of the Convention shall be determined by an Annex VII
29 tribunal, not by India's Special Court. The dispute has now been taken to that 30 Annex VII tribunal.

31
32 This very important consideration aside, the Indian Supreme Court at least saw 33 clearly what has been clear to Italy throughout, that in this matter, which India's 34 Counsel says has barely a link with the law of the sea²⁵, UNCLOS provisions are 35 actually most important+.

36
37 Mr President, Members of the Tribunal, I would now like to examine where India's 38 contradictory submissions leave Italy's two requests, in particular as far as prejudice
39 and urgency are concerned.

40
41 Our First Request . it will be recalled . is that India should suspend its domestic 42 jurisdiction during the pendency of the proceedings. The Indian Special Court cannot 43 remain seized of the determination of rights under UNCLOS provisions, while the 44 determination of those rights is simultaneously pending before the Annex VII tribunal.

45
46 It is now for that tribunal to decide who, between Italy or India, is correct in the 47 competing interpretations of the UNCLOS provisions which are clearly and 48 importantly engaged in this case. It is Italy's right under UNCLOS to have this ²⁴ ITLOS/PV.25/C24/2 (unchecked), 10 August 2015, p. 19, line 49 (Pellet).

²⁵ ITLOS/PV.25/C24/2 (unchecked), 10 August 2015, p. 14, line 13 (Pellet).

1 dispute concerning the interpretation and application of the Convention's provisions
2 adjudged by the Annex VII tribunal. The exercise of domestic jurisdiction must now
3 await the result of the Annex VII proceedings.

4
5 A principle to which I already referred yesterday is particularly important in this
6 context. States must decide jurisdiction and immunity at the outset . in limine litis.²⁶

7
8 But, the %outset+cannot last three and half years . and beyond. And when it does,
9 the prejudice cannot be said to have faded away. On the contrary, the prejudice to 10 Italy's rights is more acute, given that India . although it has not yet decided if it has 11 jurisdiction . is still exercising it.

12
13 Mr President, Members of the Tribunal, let me now come to the Second Request.
14 The position of India comes down to this: We cannot let go of Sergeant Gironi,
15 whom we have already detained for three and half years. We need him as a
16 guarantee . as Professor Pellet said %he presence of Mr Gironi on Indian soil
17 provides the guarantee+.²⁷ As for Sergeant Latorre, it is for India to decide if and 18 when his detention should resume. By the way, we may well decide we do not have 19 jurisdiction over this matter after all. But he and Sergeant Latorre must remain 20 subject to our jurisdiction. And as to the fact that the marines do not yet know with 21 what offence, and under what statute they will be charged, it is all their fault and 22 Italy's fault.

23
24 Mr President, Members of the Tribunal, this is a simply indefensible line for India to 25 take. Let me make four points in this regard.

26
27 First, the point that no charges have, even until now, been laid against the two 28 marines is a point that both Additional Solicitor General Narasimha and Mr Bundy
29 have conceded.²⁸ Mr Narasimha explicitly stated in his address to this Tribunal that 30 the stay of the Special Court proceedings meant that %he charges prepared by the 31 NIA have been kept in abeyance+.²⁹

32
33 Mr Bundy admitted that there are no charges, alleging that it was the marines who 34 blocked the receipt by the prosecutor of the investigation report.³⁰ Mr Narasimha
35 blamed Italy for the failure to issue charges because it is Italy that has %arriage of 36 the proceedings+.³¹

37
38 Mr President, Members of the Tribunal, this is an exercise of criminal jurisdiction. The 39 idea that the defence has %arriage of the proceedings+is not serious.

40
41 Second, not only has India failed to charge the marines and failed to identify the 42 Statute under which they would have to defend themselves, India has also not 43 decided if, after all, it has jurisdiction under UNCLOS. And it wants to deprive the

1 Annex VII tribunal of its prerogatives in relation to the determination of that issue by
 2 saying . contrary to the position taken by its own Supreme Court . that this dispute
 3 has nothing to do with the law of the sea.

4
 5 Third, delay, as we heard from Sir Daniel, can in no way be put at Italy's doorstep.
 6 India is responsible for its own legal system . not Italy. The contention that the delay
 7 in the legal system of a State is the fault of another State . and one State that was 8 objecting to the jurisdiction throughout . is, on its face, absurd. India seeks to make 9 this absurdity good by suggesting that the marines and Italy abused the Indian
 10 domestic process. As we heard, there is no basis for this suggestion. Let me 11 emphasize that of this so-called abuse of process in connection to proceedings in 12 India there is not a trace in the record of the Indian proceedings. It has not been 13 alleged by India before its own courts, let alone established by those courts. There is 14 not an order or a judgment that says that Italy or the marines are guilty of some form
 15 of abuse of process in the conduct of the litigation.

16
 17 In any event, as I mentioned yesterday, even an uncooperative individual is entitled 18 to due process. Wherever in Delhi the blame for this delay might lie, due process 19 should have been respected.

20
 21 Fourth, as we said yesterday, every day spent in detention is irreparable. That 22 principle was clearly one of the bases for the Order in Arctic Sunrise, with which India
 23 has not really engaged. That principle is more acutely relevant here, given that 24 constraints on liberty have gone on for longer, without charges, and with uncertainty
 25 over India's jurisdiction in India's own courts hanging over them.

26
 27 Mr President, Members of the Tribunal, let me now return to the question of urgency.

28
 29 India sought to respond to urgency with a long account of the Indian court
 30 proceedings. Again, India seeks to rely on delay produced by its own legal system to 31 somehow argue that there is no urgency. But that misses the point. Liberty is being 32 constrained, with jurisdiction not decided under Indian law or under international law,
 33 and, as you decided in Arctic Sunrise, constraints on liberty and movement
 34 constitute an urgent situation incapable of later being remedied. Delay here injures
 35 all those who want the facts around the Enrica Lexie incident established. It injures
 36 those who lost loved ones and want to know the truth. But it also injures those who 37 have had these allegations, never properly formalized as charges under any law,
 38 hanging over their heads and who protest their innocence. And it cannot be seriously 39 suggested that Italy and the marines are to be blamed for this delay because they 40 refused to concede the case on jurisdiction and immunity in the Indian courts.

41
 42 Mr Bundy recalled a passage in Ghana/Côte d'Ivoire which captures the test on 43 urgency.³² In that passage urgency is defined by the

44
 45 need to avert a real and imminent risk that irreparable prejudice may be 46 caused to the rights in issue.³³

32 ITLOS/PV.25/C24/2 (unchecked), 10 August 2015, p. 21, lines 39-40 (Bundy).

33 Dispute concerning Delimitation of the Maritime Boundary between Ghana and Côte d'Ivoire in the Atlantic Ocean, Provisional Measures, Order of 25 April 2015, para. 41.

1 If I may unpack this statement, the test for urgency comprises three elements.

2
3 The first element is that irreparable prejudice to the rights must be shown. Italy has 4 clearly shown irreparable prejudice by reference to each of the two Requests and 5 with ample support from this Tribunal's jurisprudence.

6
7 The second element is imminence. We are dealing here with ongoing exercises of 8 jurisdiction, in relation to both the First and the Second Request. Ongoing prejudice 9 must be assumed to be also imminent, unless there is some very good reason to 10 think that is about to come to an end. Here, India has given you no such good 11 reason.

12
13 On the contrary, India says . and I am quoting language used yesterday . that ~~the~~ 14 right to see through this process³⁴ is a ~~fundamental~~ right of India+. ³⁵ If it ever was a 15 fundamental right, it is one that India chose to limit when it became a party to 16 UNCLOS and accepted the principle of binding dispute settlement under the 17 Convention. But, by stating in such clear terms that it will press on with the exercise
18 of jurisdiction, India is dispelling any suggestion that in this case ~~ongoing~~+may 19 somehow not mean ~~imminent~~+. The requirement of imminence is clearly satisfied.

20
21 Moving on to the third requirement, Mr President and Members of the Tribunal, real
22 risk, that requirement is satisfied here too because the irreparable prejudice to Italy's
23 rights is not a matter of probable assessment. This is not about hypothetical risks
24 that must be assessed on a ~~real risk~~+basis. The irreparable prejudice to Italy's 25 rights is certain and, again, ongoing. What we have here is not just a real risk of 26 prejudice; we have real irreparable prejudice. We satisfy that element to a higher 27 degree.

28
29 In addition to irreparable prejudice that is real, Mr President and Members of the 30 Tribunals, you must also factor into your assessment the real risk that there will be 31 further and aggravated irreparable prejudice. This aspect must be examined closely 32 in the light of India's submissions yesterday.

33
34 We know that there is an important hearing on August 26; we do not know what 35 position the Union of India will take there. Different things could happen depending 36 on the stance that the Union of India is due . or rather overdue . to take before 37 India's courts. We do not need to provide you with a detailed assessment of these 38 different short-term scenarios and the further risks that they pose to Italy because I
39 can simply refer you to the contradictory assessments of the ~~short-term~~+scenarios
40 here that you heard yesterday from India's Counsel.

41
42 Professor Pellet said: ~~nothing~~ leads one to think that they+. meaning their cases
43 still pending in India . ~~will not be settled in a reasonably short time~~+. ³⁶ Mr Bundy
44 however says that ~~there is no chance~~+that the proceedings in the Special Court will 45 start ~~in the near future~~+. ³⁷ On one assessment coming from India's Counsel, we are 46 told that we should proceed on the basis that the Indian proceedings will come to an

1 end in a short time. On another assessment, we are told that there is not even a
2 chance in the near future of the Special Court beginning its proceedings.

3
4 At a minimum, for the Indian proceedings to be settled ~~in~~ a reasonably short time;³⁸
5 there must be a very significant risk that in the near future the Special Court will 6 begin the trial. Simply on the basis of the assessments of what might happen in the 7 short term . this is about a short time frame . from India's Counsel, you have 8 enough to conclude that there is here a risk . and a risk that is at least a real risk .
9 that further irreparable prejudice to Italy's rights will soon be inflicted through the 10 commencement of the criminal trial.

11
12 Mr President, Members of the Tribunal, let me look briefly at the consequences of 13 Indian proceedings moving on and even coming to a conclusion before the matter
14 has been adjudged by the Annex VII tribunal.

15
16 India says that, even in that case, Italy's rights would suffer no prejudice because 17 India would comply with the award of the Annex VII tribunal. But how could India's 18 compliance with an award in favour of Italy undo the various consequences of India's 19 exercise of jurisdiction? Those consequences cannot be undone. The criminal trial 20 cannot be undone. The detention cannot be undone. Once Indian proceedings have 21 reached what . you heard it from India's Counsel . is pretty much the foregone
22 conclusion of finding the marines guilty, how could Italy at that point realistically
23 assert any jurisdictional right? Any exercise of jurisdiction by the Italian authorities at 24 that point would be severely undermined, in fact probably completely compromised.
25 A criminal trial would have already taken place, although one vitiated ab initio by the 26 lack of jurisdiction. There could also be severe impediments to having a second 27 criminal trial in respect of the same offence: from arguments of ne bis in idem, to the 28 fact that a long time in custody would have already been spent. Moreover, the 29 punitive power, which is an essential element of criminal jurisdiction, would have 30 been exercised not by the State which had jurisdiction but by the State which lacked 31 it. This is all irreparable prejudice and the risk of this happening as a result of those 32 assessments about the short-term scenarios is urgent.

33
34 Mr President and Members of the Tribunal, we have real irreparable prejudice that 35 derives from the status quo, which is defined by the continuing exercise of 36 jurisdiction and the ongoing imposition of bail conditions, but we also have a real risk
37 of further and aggravated irreparable prejudice.

38
39 Let me now come to a final point on urgency, and that is the relationship between 40 Italy's case on urgency and the timing of Italy's Request.

41
42 In the Camouco Case, this Tribunal drew an important distinction. (I am afraid we 43 have not been able to provide you with a Judges' folder on this quotation but you will 44 be familiar with it.) The Tribunal said:

45
46 The Tribunal finds that there is no merit in the arguments of the 47 Respondent regarding delay in the presentation of the Application. In any 48 event, article 292 of the Convention requires prompt release of the vessel
49 or its crew once the Tribunal finds that an allegation made in the ³⁸ ITLOS/PV.25/C24/2 (unchecked), 10 August 2015, p. 20, line 32 (Pellet).

1 Application is well-founded. It does not require the flag State to file an 2 application at any particular time after the detention of a vessel or its 3 crew.³⁹

4
 5 This was in relation to prompt release proceedings. In that context, there may 6 perhaps have been some arguable basis for saying that delay in the filing of an
 7 application should cast a negative light on the State request, but even in that context
 8 the Tribunal said clearly that this is not the case. The well-foundedness of the 9 application must be assessed without reference to the issue of delay in filing it. The 10 preconditions for seeking the prompt release may have been satisfied before, but 11 failing to act as soon as those preconditions arise does not produce a sort of 12 estoppels, rendering the application inadmissible. again to use language from the 13 other side. There is just no basis for that principle. The well-foundedness of the 14 application is to be assessed when it is brought before the Tribunal.

15
 16 That same important analytical distinction applies here, and it applies here a fortiori.
 17 You have heard about the history of the negotiations and I will not repeat what Sir
 18 Daniel said. I will just add that a negotiated solution, once reached, can take effect
 19 immediately and settle the dispute permanently, even if it takes a long time to reach
 20 and does not involve a consistent trajectory. As Sir Daniel said, there was a 21 sustained effort when two new governments were formed in April 2014 but that 22 clearly came to an end in May 2015. That explains time here, but, I repeat, this is not 23 the issue when it comes to urgency. This Tribunal has to assess urgency on the 24 circumstances before it now. May 2015 is the point when it became clear to Italy that 25 there was no other way for it to address the severe and increasing concerns other 26 than by resorting to international arbitration under UNCLOS.

27
 28 Mr President, Members of the Tribunal, with the further guarantees to address
 29 India's concerns, which Sir Daniel explained yesterday and to which Italy's agent will 30 soon return, we submit that Italy's two Requests are appropriate, necessary and 31 urgent.

32
 33 Mr President, I have concluded and I will now ask you to call Italy's Agent

34
 35 THE PRESIDENT: Thank you, Mr Verdirame. I now give the floor to the Agent of 36 Italy, Mr Azzarello.

37
 38 MR AZZARELLO: Mr President, Members of the Tribunal, before I read our final 39 submissions, allow me to say a few words.

40
 41 I would like to start with the issue of the death of the two Indian fishermen on 42 15 February 2012. India submits that Italy has disregarded the fact that two Indian 43 citizens lost their lives.

44
 45 Mr President, Members of the Tribunal, this is not the case. Italy regrets the death of 46 Valentine Jalestine and Ajeesh Pink and has expressed this view on many occasions.
 47 Italy has also provided their families with ex-gratia payments, on a without prejudice

³⁹ "Camouco" (Panama v. France), Prompt Release, Judgment, ITLOS Reports 2000, p. 10, para. 54.

1 basis. It is regrettable that India's Counsel has attempted to portray this fact as an
2 admission of responsibility on the part of the Italian marines.

3
4 Mr President, Members of the Tribunal, India has also suggested that the Tribunal
5 should be careful about trusting Italy to comply with its orders, because Italy has 6 a record of defaulting on its international obligations. Counsel for Italy has already 7 shown how Italy has always honoured the obligations that it has undertaken in the 8 context of this case.

9
10 Reliance on Judgment 238/2014 by the Italian Constitutional Court does not take 11 India's arguments any further: the case is legally and factually distinguishable and of 12 a totally different nature and order of magnitude.

13
14 The case before the Italian Constitutional Court concerned the right to have access to 15 a judicial remedy for the victims of the most egregious war crimes and crimes against 16 humanity committed during the Second World War. It was premised on the necessity
17 to safeguard one specific constitutional bedrock: that of access to justice in the case
18 of gross violations of human rights of a kind that constitute violations of jus cogens
19 norms of international law.

20
21 This has to be read by taking into account the unique aggravated circumstances of 22 the case. Germany had already admitted before the International Court of Justice that 23 war crimes and crimes against humanity were committed and that no national judge
24 was available to provide redress to victims of such crimes. In the Enrica Lexie 25 incident, the two marines maintain their innocence and the question is which national 26 judicial system has jurisdiction, both being willing to exercise it.

27
28 Mr President, Members of the Tribunal, there should be no doubt in the mind of the 29 Tribunal that Italy will abide by any decision that the Tribunal will render. There 30 should also be no doubt that Italy will abide by the undertaking . that I reaffirm in the 31 context of my final submission . to return Sergeant Latorre and Sergeant Girone to 32 India following the final determination of rights by the Annex VII tribunal, if this is 33 required by the award of the tribunal.

34
35 Lastly, Mr President, Members of the Tribunal, Italy notes India's observations that 36 the two marines are currently subject to bail constraints and its concern that Italy may 37 not be ready to impose any similar form of control over them if the provisional
38 measures requested by Italy are granted. Italy invites the Tribunal to make its order 39 subject to the conditions that it deems appropriate in this regard.

40
41 Thank you, Mr President. That concludes my statement.

42
43 MR PRESIDENT: Thank you, Mr Azzarello.

44
45 I understand that this was the last statement made by Italy during this hearing.
46 Article 75, paragraph 2, of the Rules of the Tribunal, provides that, at the conclusion
47 of the last statement made by a Party at the hearing, an Agent, without recapitulation
48 of the arguments, shall read the Party's final submissions. The written text of these 49 submissions, signed by the Agent, shall be communicated to the Tribunal and a copy
50 of it shall be transmitted to the other Party.

1
2 I now invite the Agent of Italy, Mr Azzarello to take the floor again to present the final
3 submissions of Italy.

4
5 MR AZZARELLO: Thank you, Mr President. Thank you to the Tribunal.

6
7 Mr President, in accordance with article 75, paragraph 2, of the Rules of the Tribunal,
8 I shall now read Italy's final submissions. They are as follows:

9
10 For the reasons given in its Request for the Prescription of 11 Provisional Measures dated 21 July 2015 and in the course of the 12 present hearing, Italy requests that the Tribunal prescribe the 13 following provisional measures:

14
15 a) India shall refrain from taking or enforcing any judicial or 16 administrative measures against Sergeant Massimiliano Latorre
17 and Sergeant Salvatore Girone in connection with the Enrica
18 Lexie Incident, and from exercising any other form of jurisdiction
19 over the Enrica Lexie Incident; and 20

21 b) India shall take all measures necessary to ensure that 22 restrictions on the liberty, security and movement of the marines
23 be immediately lifted to enable Sergeant Girone to travel to and 24 remain in Italy and Sergeant Latorre to remain in Italy throughout 25 the duration of the proceedings before the Annex VII tribunal.

26
27 A copy of the written text of Italy's final submissions is now being communicated to 28 the Tribunal and transmitted to the Agent of India.

29
30 Mr President, Members of the Tribunal, before I conclude let me express, on behalf of 31 the Italian Government and on behalf of all the members of the Italian delegation, our 32 profound thanks to you, Mr President, and to the Members of the Tribunal, for the 33 efficient manner in which these proceedings have been prepared and conducted. We 34 are very grateful to all concerned: to the Registrar and his staff, to the interpreters, to 35 the translators and to all those who have worked so hard behind the scenes to make 36 this hearing possible.

37
38 I would also like to thank our colleagues from India.

39
40 I thank you, Mr President.

41
42 THE PRESIDENT: Thank you, Mr Azzarello.

43
44 This concludes the oral arguments presented by Italy and this morning's sitting. We 45 will continue the hearing in the afternoon at 4.30 p.m. to hear the second round of 46 oral arguments of India.

47
48 The sitting is now closed.

49
50 (Luncheon adjournment)
